

HARRIET: It is anxiety disorder. Her series of panic attacks caused the university clinic to refer her for admission, but her brother worked her status as out-patient after only three weeks. The happiness here is overwhelmed by her nuisance value...

(Jeeringly) They said she walked out on her classmate boyfriend for a faceless rich boy. She left lectures on a fateful Monday and rode with him in a GLK Benz to see a property in the neighboring state. Another man, introduced as “Agent”, was on board.

They checked into a hotel, after dropping off the agent and set out at his return. That was the last thing our greedy girl remembered. She opened her eyes and discovered that her legs and hands were fastened by tick rope. On the floor, in the bush, she was like a cow at the slaughter. She saw her boyfriend with a white bowl, and the agent holding a sharp knife but couldn’t identify the third man that sprinkled a substance on her, she believed she was at the end of the road.

Then, sound of gunshots was heard; there was a chase. As assailants fled past the scene, the three men took to their heels before the armed vigilante men would arrive the scene. They rescued her, and she ran into the crisis of panic attack afterwards

Excerpt for female auditionee from Toxic In-Laws (Isijola, 2025)